'Flamingo Boy' (2018) is the latest novel from Michael Morpurgo and to some extent appears ostensibly to be exploring similar themes and territory as well as being set against a similar backdrop to many of his previous novels – a fairly typical WWII setting here along with Morpurgo's seemingly ever present horses.

Recounting the story of 'Flamingo Boy' is Kezia, a young Roma girl, at the time of Camargue's invasion by German Troops and whose friendship with the autistic Lorenzo (the Flamingo Boy) is one which pushes forward the story's more predominant themes: themes of friendship and unity or, as Morpurgo himself puts it – “ how people from different cultures and different backgrounds can come together, especially when they are under threat ”.

Actually, they also live in the salty swamps of the Camargue in France. The boy in this story has loved them since he was tiny – along with routine, and music, and riding the town carousel. But now war has come, and it's all falling apart. The flamingos are being shot – falling broken to the ground.

A soldier shoots a flamingo from the sky, and it falls to earth terribly injured. And even worse is to come: the carousel is damaged, the horses broken. For this vulnerable boy, everything is falling apart. Only there's a kind sergeant among the Germans - a man with a young boy of his own at home, a man who trained as a carpenter. Between them, perhaps boy and man can mend what has been broken ...
