06.06.2017. Bringing a whopping slab of neon vibrancy and joy to a forgotten petrol station in west London, Craig & Karl's chipper new public art installation HERE AFTER is more than just a pretty face | it's a functioning event space to boot. The design and illustration duo, who are based between New York and London, created the piece opposite the old BBC Television Centre in White City, and drew on the now all-but-obsoleteTV test card image to inspire its bold colour palette.

Illustration duo Craig & Karl recently created a series of limited edition toilet paper rolls for the "Who Gives A Crap," an organization that creates and distribute environmentally friendly toilet paper and donates 50% of its profits to WaterAid to build toilets and improve sanitation in the developing world. The duos idea for the project was to create a different graphic pattern for each of the rolls that featured a single human feature; an eye, an ear, nose, mouth and a finger.
