A moot is an imaginary court case, involving invented facts, and usually on a point of law that hasn't yet been established by the courts. For a moot, you'll have to read the case documents, get to know (and possibly research) the law on the matter, and prepare and deliver a speech in front of a moot judge.

Zoe Evans, Tuula Petersen. Mooting is an excellent way to show to recruiters your commitment to the profession and the range of skills at your disposal. It is particularly relevant for students applying to the BPTC due to its noticeable similarities with a career at the Bar. Here, we explore the value of mooting and why, as a second-year law student, you should get involved.

Mooting in second year | AllAboutLaw

Mooting enables students (1) to engage with and think deeply about interesting and topical legal issues, (2) to enhance their advocacy, legal research and writing skills, (3) to work closely with and learn from their peers. and (4) to demonstrate their interest in advocacy and competence as an advocate to prospective employers.

Mooting: What is it and why take part? | Oxford Law Faculty

Mooting is the oral presentation of a legal issue or problem against an opposing counsel and before a judge. It comprises two pairs of student advocates, who take on the role of barristers. They each argue a fictitious legal appeal case in front of a judge, normally a lecturer or practising lawyer. It is perhaps the closest experience that a student can have whilst at university to appearing in court.

In the world of mooting, however, the legal-logical correctness of a mooters' submissions is to an extent subservient to the advocacy skills with which it is prosecuted. It is this need for elegance as well as correctness therefore that distinguishes mooting from mere advocacy. It also highlights the need for effective coaching as a separate requirement from the acquisition of the necessary legal knowledge to be the author of robust and correct legal arguments.

Better coaching with regard to communication was the second most prominent goal, while resilience, innovative thinking and emotional intelligence also ranked highly. Companies were less worried about their employees improving their customer advocacy skills, leading for inclusion and getting up to speed with their workload as areas that required further coaching.
