anywhere and their journey makes them richest of all. Some tales have a moral and some don't make any sense. Some will make you laugh, others make you cry. The world is a library, young Poison, and you'll never get to read the same book twice." – Chris Wooding, Poison

Chris Wooding (Author of Retribution Falls)

Poison had spent the day roaming the denser marshes that surrounded the lake where Gull stood, cropping mushrooms and roots with her rusty little sickle. Everything metal rusted within a year in this place, with all the moisture in the air, yet they could never seem to get wood or stone sharp enough to serve as decent blades.

Poison by Chris Wooding | Teen Ink

Wooding takes fairytales and folklore and wraps them up in gruesome monsters and sinister characters, tossing a scathing cleverness overtop of it all. In her journey, Poison faces morbid creatures, from witches to spiders, and Wooding's writing has the reader sitting at the edge of their seat, nervously glancing up at odd creaks in their own home, or sudden blurts of conversation in a coffee shop.
