"The Collector of Dying Breaths" does just that. Imagine being able to capture the dying breaths of people and giving them to newborns so the soul of that person is born again. In the 16th century Rene' le Florentin, an orphan who trained at a monastery with a monk who worked with scents and medicines, was ordered by his beloved mentor to help him die to relieve his pain and to capture his last breath.

I was totally taken with the idea of our souls being expelled in that last breath, and it became the basis of the novel. SG: Your ability to convey the scents you write about was masterful. I truly was smelling while reading.

"The Collector of Dying Breaths " isn't a 'Romance Novel', in the usual sense. It IS, however, a fascinating mystery that jumps from 1573 Italy and France to present day France and New York. The characters and their stories are SO beautifully believable, that I found myself looking over my shoulder in my gardens looking for Rene and Isabeau as well as Robbie and Jac.
